PATHS TO PARTICIPATION

How to help hunters and target shooters try new shooting sports activities.
Overview

The purpose of this project is to help improve hunting and shooting sports marketing efforts by describing how current hunters and shooters can be encouraged to try other shooting activities. To achieve this, a custom survey was fielded through NSSF partner organizations from June 2017 to August 2017. Qualified survey respondents were those who participated in hunting or recreational shooting at least once within the past three years. Qualified respondents were then asked questions about their introduction and evolution through various hunting and shooting activities. Previous and current activities, as well as activities they would be interested in trying, were all evaluated. All individuals in this analysis were at least moderately interested in the addressed activity, as determined by a survey question.

The sample for this study included individuals recruited by NSSF partner organizations. The results are not representative of the population of hunters and shooters, but rather the constituency of NSSF’s partner organizations. The results are not meant to be representative of all hunters and shooters, but instead were designed to support hunter and shooter retention efforts by explaining interest levels in new shooting sports activities and how to best help current hunters and shooters try new activities.

As a result, these results do not focus on how to recruit new, first time participants to the hunting and shooting sports, but instead focus on how to encourage our current customers to try new activities.
Introduction

As is normal, people frequently take on new recreational activities and drop others. As the shooting sports industry, the concern is our customers might drop shooting sports completely. The purpose of this study was to identify opportunities and tactics to encourage current customers to try new forms of hunting and shooting activities.

Hunters generally want to try new hunting activities that are not readily available in their home region. For example, the biggest interest for pig hunting comes from the Midwest while the greatest interest in elk and waterfowl hunting is in the South. While this makes sense, given the costs associated with travel, interest still exists in hunting different species or trying new methods close to home. For target shooting, there is little difference across the regions. Overall, the greatest interest in trying new shooting activities lies within the South and the Midwest. The many types of hunting and shooting activities available to promote are presented within this report.

There are a few hunting and shooting activities where the majority want to try it for the first time, such as target shooting with a crossbow or pig hunting. Accessibility, time and knowing how to get started are some of the most common hurdles we need to help our customers overcome. For those that want to hunt, it’s difficult to find convenient and affordable lands, while target shooters often have trouble finding a local range offering the activities they are interested in trying. Both shooters and hunters hesitate in buying equipment needed for new activities before they try the sport. These and other issues are also outlined within this report.

This report presents a wealth of information. Recognizing most hunting and shooting sports programs and organizations focus on specific types of activities, after some brief overall insights, details are presented for specific types of hunting and shooting sports.
Key takeaways regarding how to help hunters and target shooters try new activities:

- Create easy access – Create mobile apps and online tools to help them find places to hunt or local shooting ranges, make reservations, rent equipment, etc. In addition, create beginner apps or voice-activated assistants, like Google Assistant or Amazon’s Alexa that answer questions, such as what to do with their harvest, where to rent equipment, how to aim and shoot, as well as advanced level apps on perfecting their skills. Provide equipment rentals, hunting guides and group shooting / hunting events or programs that allow them to try the sport.

- Be simplistic / convenient – Promote how it can fit in their busy schedules, such as “way to spend time with family,” and “spend more time outdoors” and offer more close-to-home experiences. The easier an activity appears, the more simple and convenient it becomes.

- Influence through their friends and peers – Hunting and shooting are social activities. Very few will participate if they do not see their friends or others like themselves participating. Leverage non-professionals’ hunting and shooting videos, photos and stories through social media platforms (Instagram, Facebook, YouTube), blogs, magazines and share through television programs. Encourage friends to connect at the field or at the range.

- Promote unique experiences – Collaborate with cross-industry retailers, organizations and manufacturers to create events or experiences that current customers will want to make time for.

- Educate through augmented reality / video – To give a lasting impression on what it’s like to experience new hunting and shooting activities, simulate the experience at outdoor retailers, state fairs or other outdoor events where current customers gather, or showcase professionals hunting or shooting via online video on YouTube.

Thank you for your interest in helping advance hunting and shooting sports.
Messaging Opportunity:
Promote how activities are a way to spend time with friends and family and spend more time outdoors. It’s always been an interest, so now is the time for them to do it! Do not promote an activity as a solo effort, or complicated.

Traditional Rimfire Rifle Target Shooting

A look at how to help those interested, but have not tried the sport.
In general, hunters that are interested in trying target shooting with a traditional centerfire rifle are very experienced in using rifles. 38% of these hunters used a rifle to hunt for the first time and 89% of them have hunted with a traditional rifle in the past three years.

Many shooters want to return to the sport. Thirty-eight percent started with a traditional rimfire rifle and 60% of them went plinking with one in the past three years.

Not having access to a shooting range or access to a traditional centerfire rifle and not having enough time appears to be common problems for those who want to try or return to the sport. Not having anyone to go with and not knowing how to get started are also issues for some. Creating group shooting events and offering rental opportunities may inspire them to get to the range to shoot one.

Hunters and shooters say that receiving an invitation from a friend or joining a local shooting range would motivate them the most to try or get back into target shooting with a traditional centerfire rifle. Local ranges have an opportunity to generate more awareness via television, magazines and newsletters. In addition, programs hosted by state agencies and outdoor retailers can also inspire them to engage in the sport.
Key Demographics

- 97% Male
- 79% Ages 45 and older
- 57% HHI: $75K or more
- 43% College education or higher

Of current hunters & target shooters who do not shoot traditional rimfire rifle but want to, most are male, middle-aged, affluent and/or educated. They are more likely to live in the Midwest and in the South.

Region

- 39% South
- 28% West
- 17% Northeast
- 15% Midwest

36% of these hunters used a traditional rifle (centerfire or rimfire) to hunt for the first time and 89% of them are currently hunting with a traditional rifle (centerfire or rimfire). Roughly two thirds (61%) say their father introduced them and 54% of them targeted small game on their first hunt. Only 6% haven’t tried hunting other species. For those that did, it took between two to five years for 40% of them and only one season for 27% of them.

Q: Which methods do you currently hunt with? (N=1,836); Which species are you currently targeting? (N=1,719); Who took you on your first hunt? (N=1,830); On your first hunt, what species did you target? (N=1,835); How many years did you only hunt [first species hunted] before trying another type of hunting? (N=1,826); What type of firearm, bow or crossbow did you use on your first hunt? (N=1,832).
MOVING TARGET SHOOTERS TO TRADITIONAL RIMFIRE RIFLE
Two-thirds (64%) of shooters say their father introduced them to the sport and only 12% were introduced by a friend. They are diverse as 80% started with plinking and then within two to five years, 32% of shooters tried a new activity and 25% branched out within a year. Many of them want to get back into shooting a traditional rimfire rifle. Thirty-eight percent started with a traditional rimfire rifle and 60% of those that went plinking shot one in the past three years.

Not having enough time or access to a traditional rimfire rifle are preventing hunters and target shooters from shooting one for the first time at a range. Not having access to a range that offers the activities they are interested in (long range, silhouette and steel challenge) and not having anyone to go with are also issues for some. Offering rental opportunities and promoting group events as well as overall benefits of spending more time outdoors may inspire them.

Q: Why haven’t you gone target shooting with this firearm? (N=141).
REASONS WHY THEY HAVEN’T RETURNED TO SHOOTING A TRADITIONAL RIMFIRE RIFLE

47% say “there is not enough time.”

No time

29% say “these activities are not offered at ranges in my area.”

Not available

21% say “they don’t know how to start.”

Don’t know how

20% reported “they don’t have anyone to go with.”

No one to go with

Not having enough time and finding a shooting range that offers the activities (Long range, steel challenge) that they are interested in are preventing a significant amount of hunters and shooters from returning to traditional rimfire rifle. Not knowing how to get started and not having anyone to go shooting with are challenges as well. Promoting the convenience, offering more close-to-home activities may encourage them to return to the sport.

Q: Why haven't you gone target shooting with this firearm? (N=992).
HOW TO HELP THEM TRY / RETURN TO TRADITIONAL RIMFIRE RIFLE

42% “Join a local range”

32% “An invitation from a friend / family member”

27% “Program offered by an outdoor retailer”

27% “Books / Magazines”

26% “Program offered by a state wildlife agency”

24% “YouTube videos”

19% “Membership in a non-profit organization that is specific to this activity”

13% “Online forums / blogs”

54% of hunters and 45% of shooters say “friends” are the greatest influence in trying new types of hunting and shooting activities. Generating awareness through local ranges, providing programs hosted by outdoor retailers and state wildlife agencies and encouraging active shooters to invite friends will help more people engage in the sport.

Q: What would help you get into that shooting activity that you’re interested in? (N=2,818); When it comes to individuals, who has the greatest influence on you with regard to trying different species or trying new hunting methods? (N=1,717). When it comes to individuals, who has the greatest influence on you with regard to trying different types of shooting? (N=2,533).
